A NOTE ON CITATIONS: All works that are included in the bibliography in Appendix 2 are cited in the essays by author, title, and, in the case of multiple editions, year. All references to the China Illustrata are to the authorized edition by Jansson (Amsterdam, 1667). For full bibliographic information, please consult the appendix. In the illustration captions, page numbers have been given when the illustrations appear in paginated portions of the books. However, many illustrations are not themselves paginated and may be inserted in different places in different copies of the same work. In such cases, the facing page of Stanford’s copies has been cited, which may not always correspond to other copies.

CONTRIBUTORS

Martha Baldwin
Assistant Professor, Department of the History of Science, Stonehill College, North Easton, Massachusetts

Paula Findlen
Professor of History, History Department, Stanford University, Stanford, California

Michael John Gorman
Lecturer, Program in Science, Technology and Society, Stanford University, Stanford, California

Penelope Gouk
Wellcome Researcher, Centre for the History of Science, Technology and Medicine, University of Manchester, Manchester, England

Barry E. Hinman
Special Collections Librarian for Cataloguing, Department of Special Collections, Stanford University Libraries, Stanford, California

John E. Mustain
Rare Book Librarian and Classics Bibliographer, Department of Special Collections, Stanford University Libraries, Stanford, California

Tara E. Nummedal
Graduate Student in History of Science and Early Modern European History, Stanford University, Stanford, California

Haun Saussy
Associate Professor, Asian Languages and Comparative Literature, Stanford University, Stanford, California

Daniel Stolzenberg
Graduate Student in Early Modern European History and History of Science, Stanford University, Stanford, California

Nick Wilding
Hite Postdoctoral Research Fellow, Program in Science, Technology, and Society, Stanford University, Stanford, California

On page 160: “All are in One, and One in All.” From Polygraphia Nova, title page.